

Maine's Most Endangered Historic Properties—2006

A program of Maine Preservation

The World War II-era Control Tower in Houlton is one of only two remaining army aviation control towers in the country. The Town nominated the deteriorating structure to Maine Preservation's list of Most Endangered Historic properties to bring attention to the need for funds necessary to repair and restore the structure. The community's plans for the adjacent hanger and land that once housed a German prisoner-of-war camp from 1944-46 are to transfer ownership to the Aroostook Historical and Art Museum. The control tower, once part of the Houlton Air Base, is an important component of the former Houlton Air Base and POW camp, and the unique 20th century heritage of Houlton.

To learn more or to make a contribution, contact the Town Manager of Houlton at (207) 532-7111 or write to Town of Houlton, 21 Water Street, Houlton, Maine 04730.

NOV 14 2006